I work daily with some of the world's most infectious and fatal diseases. Reading internal reports and also stuff available on the internet (papers, new articles), I'm becoming extremely concerned we are massively unprepared for the next epidemic.

People imagine that any kind of epidemic that occurs today can be more or less mitigated through modern public health infrastructure, stocks of vaccines and antivirals, and basic quarantining measures.

The issue is that in modern, densely populated cities, a sufficiently advanced pathogen would be capable of infecting the vast majority of inhabitants in weeks, before any health measures could have an effect. The population density is enough that current quarantining techniques used in cases like smallpox would be completely ineffective. Antivirals have historically proven ineffective and hard to disseminate while our current vaccine stocks might not work at all.

Currently computer simulations indicate that a dangerous enough pathogen could effectively destroy a city like Los Angeles in a few months. "Destroyed" in the sense that emergency services are shut down, medical services are shut down, all economic output ceases and over 30-60% of the population is wiped out.

In short, a small nation-state or even well-funded terrorist organization could easily reduce the US to the state of a third world nation with. Yet no one except my colleagues seems to give a fuck.

There has been a lot of work done with engineering viruses for specific functions such as gene therapy. The main problem and the reason a lot of this research is highly restricted is that many of the same techniques for engineering a virus to kill off all mosquitoes can be applied to almost any target, including hominids.

That and the risk of spillover. You might intend to wipe out mosquitoes, but you end up wiping out a whole class of insects causing complete ecological collapse.

Of course if you're a terrorist that probably sounds delightful. I'm obviously biased but I considered biological agents, especially viruses, to the be the most dangerous thing in the world today, even moreso than nuclear weapons due to their relative affordability and ease of dispersal.

China is a major source of concern. Not only is the place a massive breeding ground for novel agents due to shitty agricultural practices, the proximity of humans to animals ensures that novel strains of influenza and other viruses will hop to humans and spread like wildfire.

It literally only takes one mutation of one virus to unleash a pandemic. Every infectious pig or bird is a little viral containment vessel that could birth the next plague.

Though I'd be surprised if China is actively doing large-scale tests on their population, it wouldn't surprise me. That said, China's biological weapons program is much much larger than the public or even experts in the field are aware of. They are almost certainly genetically engineering certain viruses (smallpox) to be vaccine immune, but they are probably also engineering them to be more lethal agents in general. We really don't know the full scale of China's biological weapons program but I would bet you wouldn't be able to sleep well if you knew its full scope.

Obligatory recommendation you don't do that, and instead come work for the CDC and other organizations working to fight these coming pandemics.

But theoretically, any well-stocked university lab with trained professionals would be capable of genetically modifying a virus to do all sorts of things.

The most difficult thing would be gaining access to some of the more virulent agent such as smallpox or ebola. Most of these are only available in incredibly well guarded facilities in just a few countries.

North Korea likely has a decently sized biological weapons program as well as a cache of some of the more deadly pathogens. A desperate worker there could theoretically smuggle out any number of terrible diseases and sell them on the black market for $10-$100k, which for a lot of terrorist organizations would be a pittance.

It's a little complicated. Publicly, we have ceased production of biological weapons. Privately, we already know how to make effective dispersal munitions, and the kind of viral engineering work we do for the purpose of good can just as easily be repurposed for evil. If the US military wanted it could quite easily engineer and disperse a literal apocalyptic plague for less money than it takes to build an F-35.

Hypothetically, if our government turned fully tyrannical and evil a-la Nazi Germany, we could have a very robust biological weapons program producing munitions within a year or so.

This is actually a non schizo post. The risk of a dangerous disease is a real danger. And we aren't prepared. No nation is. I think a dangerous disease culling the population would be a great benefit to humanity however. Hopefully it would allow society to restructure itself as a more disease resistant society.

Here’s a question - what sources of information should I track for early-warning signs of an epidemic? If I sequestered myself for weeks every time the next swine flu or batch of bad vape juice rolled around, I’d be inside half the year. Are there official CDC outlets, or sources of information which the CDC monitors to detect the various expected warning signs?

Interesting question. A couple years ago at a conference I mistakenly entered a small conference room with a presentation about the emergence of candida and its potential as a possible bioweapon. Fungi have unique properties in that they are incredibly resilient and good at spreading, so if you were to introduce a dangerous fungus into a major city it would be almost impossible to fully eradicate so you would end up having to abandon the city or else spend something like $500 billion on cleanup. I couldn't figure out whether the presenters were cranks or geniuses but seeing the recent articles about candida it does make me wonder...

Literally already happened to europe once

The black death beget the rennaissance as the average feudal slave finally had access to all the resources and bargaining power he could want in order to gain himself a good wage and some land. It resulted in one of the best and most creative periods in human history, and even to this day a large portion of the european population now sports resistance to the bubonic plague and several other diseases.

It was a terrible period to live through, but it made europe stronger.

I saw a few internal documents that scared me pretty badly.

One was regarding what are called chimeraviruses and research work done in the Soviet Union and more recently in North Korea (hypothesized).

The simple idea of a chimera virus is you combine two viral agents into one, which as you can imagine would make it easy to create a virus with more than 95% mortality rate.

The scarier part is that a chimera virus can theoretically have multiple traits that make it far superior as a biological weapon, and the traits can present at different time periods. For example, Ebola is quite deadly, but it's actually pretty hard to spread due to needing direct blood contact.

So what would happen if you combined ebola with say, a common flu? With sufficiently advanced engineering, you could have an ebola that initially only presents as a standard flu for the first 1-2 weeks. People would continue to take flights, go to work etc thinking it was just a relatively harmless flu.

Then two weeks later you'd have massive "mysterious" outbreaks of Ebola all across the world. Millions of people would suddenly present with symptoms of ebola and be freaking the fuck out.

Meanwhile, people who still had the "flu" would continue taking flights, going to work etc.

By the time we discovered that the flu and ebola outbreaks were all a part of the same virus, you'd be looking at easily over 100 million dead, completely collapsed infrastructures etc. It would be unprecedented in modern times.

but THAT's not even the scariest document I read, and I hesitate to talk about it just to avoid alarming people. it's not even really something you can prepare for beyond relocating to a shack in the woods and submerging yourself in a vat of bleach five times a day.

Is this true:

AIDS was a virus that is protected by the protein coat on the RNA preventing the antibodies, the T-4 cells, of the immune system from detecting and eliminating it. The alleged cure for AIDS lies in the excrement of the white fungus that’s grown from the Chinese cucumber Trichosanthes kirilowii. This excrement, which develops after about two or three weeks, is separated with hydrazine sulphate in an acidification process which dissolves the protein coat on the RNA and exposes the nucleus of the virus that’s detected by the antibodies in the immune system. Regardless of how weak the immune system is, the virus will be destroyed. No more than 20cc dose per 36 hour period should be administered. No antibiotics should be used during this period. The 20ccs are metabolized in 36 hours, having dissolved the protein coat on the virus.

Hypothetically there was a country that wanted to create a doomsday weapon that would function even beyond the deterrent capabilities of nuclear weapons. Basically a "fuck you, world" kind of weapon.

If certain dissidents are to be believed, this weapon has been produced, likely still exists, and may have even been used at some point.

The key feature of the virus is the incubation period. The claim is they extended the incubation period of a certain highly lethal virus to not days, or weeks, but possibly a decade or more.

During this extended incubation, the number of virus particles is low enough that it shows zero symptoms, and it would be undetectable unless you were actually looking for it. While transmission rates would be quite low, over the course of a couple years it should be able to easily spread throughout an entire population. A literal 100% rate of infection.

Now this has been known about in the virology community for a while. One of those intriguing campfire stories we would tell each other after one too many drinks at the hotel lobby.

Well one group had the idea of testing this. Is there a latent and highly lethal virus lying dormant in the population?

They took blood samples from people across the US as well as some Western European countries and discovered something quite disturbing. A mysterious virus, referred to internally as "pathogen X" present in something like 95% of the samples.

It's an unusually large virus with a very particular shape, like a large toroid with spiky protruberances along the central axis.

The genome is HUGE, and that makes knowing its actual payload at this stage almost impossible. It shares significant similarities with smallpox, lassa, influenza, and HIV, but it neither looks nor behaves like any of these.

So the conclusion at this point is an uncomfortable one. You are likely infected by a mysterious virus that might be nothing, or it may become active at some point and almost certainly kill you.

Dissident origin shouldn't be hard to guess.

Treating the virus is an open question at this point. We may be able to decrease the viral count extremely low using standard therapies, but the concern is that during the active phase it will undergo massive amplification in just a few days so it won't really matter how few virus particles are present.

The other idea is to create a vaccination against the active phase. But that would require activating the virus, and it's not clear it even has an active phrase (it may remain in the dormant phase permanently), and if it does have an active phase, what exactly triggers that is unknown.

But in theory, if we had the active form of the virus we could begin developing a vaccine very quickly. At this point serious people in the virology world treat the whole thing like a silly sideshow, but as other labs replicate the work and do their own investigating I imagine that might change pretty quickly.

The best example of this I am aware of was reported by Alibek shortly after his defection from the USSR. They took a rhinovirus and attached it to myelin, the idea being that you now have the common cold, which spreads like wildfire, but this one has the interesting property that as the body defeats the cold virus, it also learns to destroy its own myelin, thus causing MS that is always lethal. And this was just the beginning according to Ken. No doubt Israel already has far better weapons, given their complete disregard for international treaties and rampant political psychosis. You must be new, my friend, I've been scared shitless about this stuff for nearly 30 years.

Technically an active infection but asymptomatic. The genus/family is unknown. The genome is like a sock drawer. It's somewhat like a coronavirus but mostly defies classification.

This lends to the speculation of it being an engineered pathogen as it appears so different from every other known virus. It's like if you suddenly saw a dog in the wild with wings and feathers. There's no way mere evolution could produce such an unusual organism seemingly overnight. It would have had to have been purposefully created.

Detecting requires a fair bit of manual work (computers help a lot but can't do everything) so it's also possibly a matter of error on the part of the technicians.

But assuming the 5% non-carriers have some kind of immunity to it that would be a very important discovery.

A couple weeks ago I read about a newly discovered infectious disease named something like "Gerald's Fever".

It's basically like a standard flu however it appears to effect the brain not unlike standard viral encephalitis.

The scary/creepy part is how it changes the brain. The changes are very distinct.

Patient typically presents with a blunted-affect, but when shown the image of a face (especially a smiling face with eyes wide open) the patient will become terrified and begin to violently sob/convulse. If you ask the patient what is bothering them they appear totally unaware of their reaction or will justify it in some way "Oh you startled me." or "I was crying because I was thinking about my recently deceased wife."

As the symptoms worsen they will begin to become more terrified of the world generally and exhibit patterns of self-mutilation not dissimilar from Lesch–Nyhan (don't Google image that). Hands must be covered and secured to prevent them from injuring themselves including mouth guards to stop them from biting off their lips.

Fortunately, the viral infection clears up in a few weeks and symptoms disappear with patients returning to normal activity afterwards with the exception that they somewhat retain their fear of smiling faces for an indefinite period.

Thank you for your information, I work in clinical medicine and since I assume you are a virologist I would like to ask you how an engineered chimera virus like the one you described here would be treated therapeutically.

You mentioned vaccination and that this one virus has strains from influenza, so does it have a similiar mutation rate?

How stable is a pharmaceutical treatment, could it theoretically have appropiate target receptors?

You also said that its mostly in a dormant phase - What is known about its cycle? You mentioned its assymptomatic in its incubation - which ones are the target cells in its dormant phase?

Anonymous ID:rtkpshPN Mon 21 Oct 2019 06:19:18 No.230598632 Report

Engineer a disease that targets only humans, killing them 100%, but can also be carried and transmitted by animal hosts that the virus successfully reproduces within. Humans are extinct.

Lyme disease, spread by tick bites. You have 24 hours to remove said tick before you are infected, and it's a fucker. Leaves a bull's eye rash, which is its calling card. Had a vaccine with an 80% success rate, but antivaxxers had it pulled off the market. Sometimes escapes the bloodstream and enters tissue, and ultimately leading to arthritis.

Studying at Tulane, so I got to speak to one of the top researchers into Lyme disease a few weeks back. One new way they're hoping to diagnose somebody quickly is to have a tick bite a guy and check its guts to see if it has the bacteria in its saliva.

Proplem is that you need to get away early enough. What if there is incubation period of week when it can still spread. Whole city might be infected when corpses start piling up. Or what if it's just flu until you just die? How often have you seen everyone get flu and not react. So when you leave city, you wont be only one. So if you are afraid next plague, get out now.

The best evidence for this is the fact that a pathogen like smallpox has been effectively eradicated and yet to reemerge in the last 40 or so years. If it was easy to get your hands on it you'd have likely already seen it used by some group

So the real terrifying threat isnt OPs larpy campfire stories for 12 year olds. Its CRISPR, and the fact that a huge amount of DNA is race specific, and the fact that CRISPR vectors are incredibly infectious and at the same time have practically zero morbidity.

What does this mean? Take a normal e-coli strain that will survive on surfaces and colonize the human gut with no resulting illness. Infect it with chimeric bacteriophage that can also target human mitochondria. Kill everybody in a haploid group by shutting down all the cells in their entire gastro-intestinal tract.

Super scary? The chinese are certainly already rushing to develop such an agent.

Not sure of the mechanism. The report I read mostly just talked about the symptoms from a clinician's point of view. It's funny that people in the thread are calling this unbelievable. Anyone familiar with viruses would be aware of the myriad ways they can fuck with your brain/mind (Rabies hydrophobia as an example). But most people can only conceive of viruses as things that make you cough/puke diarrhea etc.

Viruses can do all kinds of interesting things, but the most successful (i.e. the ones you're likely to be familiar with) tend to be more conventional.

Whatever it is the genome is massive and vaguely trips our automated coronavirus threshold

Tell us more. Can you post the genome? OP probably isn't allowed to or would lose his clearance.

Similar to coronavirus in the fact some of the PCR results got flagged for coronavirus but not SARS. This was last week but when we worked it out it was generally around 35kb which is MASSIVE for an RNA virus.

This is just a rotation for me so I'm likely not the best person to ask beyond letting you know its in Eastern Canada

I don't see the problem.

Mosquitoes are fucking nothing compared to fucking bedbugs. Fuck those things. If we're going to make something extinct, it might as well be bedbugs.

>i'm gonna engineer a virus to wipe out insects i don't like. ticks, fleas, mosquitoes, chinks.

Please be careful if you do decide to do shit like this---bugs and insects are a source of food for many species. Just go after the ones that are truly useless, please.

And bump for interesting thread discussion. Thanks, OP.

No idea desu. The lab guys were excited though

Massive RNA virus, no obvious symptoms, NP swabs detected it on a PCR machine.

Wow why have I never heard of this? This basically means that you eurofags can drive/travel through almost the entirety of western Europe without ever having to stop or be checked at a proper border?

OP!

Before this thread shuts down do you have any links to articles?
I'm wanting to read up on stuff like this and I wouldn't mind some help on some good articles or papers that are readily available on the internet.

Cheers if you can!

Swedebro is right. We can't have Star Trek world with trash tier genetics.

Jews might be smart and conniving, but the rest of their genetics sucks. They're okay with hurting people to get their way. That kind of entitlement is evil.

And blacks, although physically strong in many ways, they also have a similar kind of trash tier entitlement.

Neither group belongs in a Star Trek world.
